

EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE.

Its Massive Vertical Base Checks the Wild West Sea.

The Eddystone rocks form a very dangerous reef, lying in the English channel about fourteen miles from Plymouth, and here, in 1605, Henry Winstanley built the first lighthouse, which lasted but eight years.

Winstanley's tower was swept away by a tremendous storm, and every one in it at the time, including the builder, was drowned. Three years later Rudyard's tower was built, only to be destroyed by fire in 1755, and then came John Smeaton's.

Modern lighthouses really date from 1759, when this third one was completed. Smeaton's design was faulty, but it served as a model for lighthouse construction in masonry, which has been followed in its general features ever since. This lighthouse stood for over a century, but it was not high enough to keep the waves from dashing the lantern and so was removed and the present one built in 1882 by James Douglass.

At the time of the completion of the new lighthouse two bells weighing two tons each were installed for fog signaling purposes. Since that date an explosive gun cotton fog signal has been erected, the bells being removed. Probably the most interesting thing about the lighthouse now on the Eddystone is its solid cylindrical structure. Heavy seas are immediately broken up and rush around to the opposite side, spray ascending to the height of the lantern gallery. On the other hand, waves striking the old tower at its foundation ran up the surface, which presented a curved face to the waves, and, unimpeded by any projection until arriving at the lantern gallery, were partially broken up by the cornice and then spent themselves in heavy spray over the lantern. The shock to which the cornice of the gallery was exposed was so great that stones were sometimes lifted from their beds.—Lookout.

A HARD WINTER.

When the Mercury Fell to Six Feet Nine Inches Below Zero.

They were talking about hard winters. The man on the cracker barrel said he remembered a winter when the mercury fell to six feet nine inches below zero, and consequently he had never seen any weather since then that he could call real cold.

"Oh, you paw!" said the man with the ginger whiskers. "Six feet nine inches! Oh, you paw!"

"Meaning that I put you in mind of Annals?" said the man on the cracker barrel.

The man with the ginger whiskers simply said: "Six feet nine inches! Oh, you paw!"

"Then listen," said the man on the cracker barrel. "It was the winter when no snow fell. Nothing fell but the thermometer that winter. We kept our thermometer hanging on a cherry tree in the yard to give it a chance. One morning the weather had been so cold the mercury went down below zero as far as it could and let the thermometer have the credit of showing it, but it couldn't do its duty by the weather by pausing there, so it busted the bulb at the bottom and kept on falling. The thermometer was six feet above the ground. We dug the mercury out in the spring, nine inches below the surface. So until you can trot out some weather that is six feet and nine inches below, don't talk to me about cold!"

The man on the cracker barrel lit his pipe and went out, and the man with the ginger whiskers just said, "Oh, be paw!"—New York Press.

Back in the Good Old Bowl Days. A man of apparent means brought two boys into a barber shop for a haircut. While waiting for the completion of the job, he said:

"I never sat in a barber's chair when I was a kid. My brother used to go over to the engine house and borrow the horse clippers. Then my mother would put a bowl on my head and cut around it. Until I was twelve years old, I always looked like a window washer's brush."—Chicago Post.

The Dead Revived. In a scientific weekly we read the headline, "Can the Dead Be Revived?" They are revived every performance at the Metropolitan Opera House. It is a most encouraging symptom to see corpses arise from the stage after the curtain falls and bow their appreciation of the applause.—Musical Courier.

Sarcasmo. Hawkshaw Holmes—I wish to be vaccinated. Doctor—What's your business? Hawkshaw Holmes—I'm a detective. Doctor—Stand out of line, please, and give somebody else a chance. There is no danger of your ever catching anything.—Boston Globe.

The Long Chase. "I understand that your splinter friend has gone into one of the professions."

"Yes."

"Indeed. And what is her particular pursuit?"

"Man."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Advancing. He only is advancing in life whose heart is getting softer, whose blood warmer, whose brain quicker, whose spirit is entering into living peace.—Ruskin.

Mercenary. Griggs—So Smart is going to marry his divorced wife? Briggs—Yes, the mercenary cuss is after the alimony he says her.—New York Times.

Gibraltar.
Gibraltar, the strongest fortress in the world, has the record for the longest investment in modern times, the English holding it against the armies of France and Spain from July 16, 1779, until Feb. 5, 1783. Military experts say now that no one can carry Gibraltar, and those who have seen the English guns on the rocky hills and the English battalions in the quiet harbor will agree with the experts. The only way in which Gibraltar can be taken is by starvation, and England has the fortress provisioned for several years now.
